

The College of Physicians & Surgeons of Alberta (CPSA) provides advice to the profession to support physicians in implementing the CPSA Standards of Practice. This advice does not define a standard of practice, nor should it be interpreted as legal advice.

Advice to the Profession documents are dynamic and may be edited or updated for clarity at any time. Please refer back to these articles regularly to ensure you are aware of the most recent advice. Major changes will be communicated to our members; however, minor edits may only be noted within the documents.

Contents

How long is a person considered a patient under sexual abuse and sexual misconduct legislation?	2
Are there exceptions to the one year rule?	2
What about conduct that falls outside of sexual abuse/sexual misconduct legislation?	3
How does CPSA view medical treatment of spouses, partners and others in a pre-existing sexual relationships?	3
How can physicians protect themselves against allegations of sexual abuse or sexual misconduct?	4
Do physicians have a duty to report sexual abuse or sexual misconduct?	5

The medical profession has long acknowledged that the dynamics involved in the physician-patient relationship, including power, authority, control and trust, absolutely must preclude sexual involvement with a patient if the patient is to receive optimal care.

In fall 2018, the government of Alberta introduced new legislation, An Act to Protect Patients, to protect patients from sexual abuse and misconduct by healthcare providers. Given this, it is critical physicians understand how a patient is defined under this legislation; the Boundary Violations: Sexual standard of practice was passed by Council outlining the definition of “patient.”

Boundary Violations: Sexual

How long is a person considered a patient under sexual abuse and sexual misconduct legislation?

As defined in the standard of practice, an individual is considered a “patient” for a minimum period of one year after the individual ceases to be the physician’s patient.

For example, the one-year period may start on the date of the patient’s last visit if there is no further medical interaction, the date any prescribed medications are completed or the date the physician-patient relationship is explicitly terminated. If a physician has any doubt, they should refrain from sexual conduct with their former patient.

There are many instances in which patients do not see their physician every year, but this does not mean the physician-patient relationship has ended.

Are there exceptions to the one year rule?

There are two broad exceptions to the one-year rule, for the purpose of sexual abuse and sexual misconduct legislation. They are as follows:

Psychotherapy

If a physician has ever provided a patient with psychotherapeutic treatment, a sexual relationship can never occur. Any time a patient is counselled regarding personal problems, it could be considered psychotherapy: doing so is considered sexual abuse under the HPA and will result in mandatory permanent revocation of the regulated member’s practice permit.

As supportive counseling and psychotherapy is a component of family medicine, and it is likely a family physician’s former patients have received some form of this care, a family physician should refrain from sexual conduct with a former patient.

Episodic Care

CPSA considers episodic care to be a single encounter with a patient, focused on a presenting concern, identified medical condition, or referred consultation with or without direct patient interaction (e.g., radiology consult), where neither the physician nor the patient have the expectation of ongoing care. In this event, the physician-patient relationship ends with the conclusion of the episodic care encounter, and it is clear from the medical record that any follow up (if required) will be with the patient’s primary care physician or another healthcare provider.

What about conduct that falls outside of sexual abuse/sexual misconduct legislation?

Consensual sexual relationships with individuals who no longer meet the definition of a patient will not result in a finding of sexual abuse; however, physicians can still be found guilty of unprofessional conduct and may face serious penalties, up to and including license revocation. In these scenarios, a hearing tribunal will look carefully at the circumstances, including any power imbalance or if the physician used information they had to pursue a relationship with the individual.

CPSA advises physicians to avoid sexual relationships with all previous patients.

CPSA advises physicians to avoid sexual relationships with all previous patients. If, despite this advice, a physician chooses to enter into a sexual relationship with a previous patient, it is strongly recommended that physicians seek advice from CPSA or the Canadian Medical Protective Association (CMPA) prior to entering into a relationship with a former patient.

How does CPSA view medical treatment of spouses, partners and others in a pre-existing sexual relationships?

Under the Code of Ethics & Professionalism, a physician must limit treatment of family members to minor or emergency services and only when another physician is not immediately available. This principle applies to the physician's spouse, interdependent adult partner or other person with whom there is an ongoing, pre-existing sexual relationship. To clarify:

- a minor condition means a non-urgent, non-serious condition that requires only short-term, routine care and is not likely to be an indication of, or lead to, a more serious condition requiring medical expertise;
- an emergency means an individual is experiencing severe suffering or is at risk of sustaining serious bodily harm if medical intervention is not promptly provided; and

Boundary Violations: Sexual

- another physician is not readily available, which means the individual could suffer harm from a delay in obtaining the services of another physician.

Providing treatment outside these parameters could result in a finding of unprofessional conduct. As such, physicians are advised to take great care in providing treatment only within the defined allowances.

How can physicians protect themselves against allegations of sexual abuse or sexual misconduct?

1. Don't ever engage in sexual relations with or sexual touching of a patient. All types of sexual conduct with patients are prohibited: even when a physician believes a patient has consented to sexual interaction, the HPA does not recognize such alleged "consent" as a valid defence. The physician's actions will be viewed as coercive, given the inherent power imbalance of the physician-patient relationship; therefore, the regulated member must maintain appropriate professional boundaries.
2. Avoid risky behaviours, such as undue physician touching, comments of a sexual nature, taking one's importance to the patient too seriously, undue self-disclosure with the patient, accepting extravagant or intimate gifts or unusual office practice. Be aware of these behaviours, remove yourself from providing care and obtain help (e.g., AMA's Physician and Family Support Program) to avoid similar behaviour in the future.
3. Always take steps to avoid misinterpretation of legitimate medical examinations. Sometimes, a physician does not intend his or her actions to be sexual in nature, but a patient perceives them as such. This risk is reduced by explaining the nature and scope of any exam or procedure in advance: using appropriate examination techniques when touching sensitive or intimate areas of the body, offering a running commentary of the exam and explaining why certain questions are relevant and necessary, like those about a patient's sexual history, or obtaining personal information.

While the patient's consent may be implied, explicit consent is necessary when the assessment involves an intimate exam (i.e., an examination including the breasts, rectum or genitalia). It is best practice for a physician to document explicit consent in the patient record when provided by the patient. In situations where the examination or procedure may affect the patient's level of consciousness or carries significant risk, written consent is recommended to ensure the patient fully understands and agrees to the exam. Physicians should be familiar with and follow CPSA's expectations for obtaining informed consent.

4. Use a chaperone. The presence of a medical chaperone as an independent third person during clinical interactions can be helpful and provide a degree of reassurance, to both the physician and the patient. A chaperone may provide considerable reassurance to a patient and should be offered during exams considered personal, intimate or requiring significant removal of clothing. Consequently, CPSA strongly recommends the use of a chaperone if requested by a patient.

Specific training is available to chaperones who work in physician offices to provide an understanding of medical procedures and knowledge of positioning in the exam room during certain examinations.

Do physicians have a duty to report sexual abuse or sexual misconduct?

If in the course of acting in a professional capacity the physician believes, on reasonable grounds, that a physician is engaged in inappropriate sexual abuse of or sexual misconduct with a patient (or former patient), he or she must report this to CPSA. A similar duty exists with respect to other regulated health professionals under the HPA (section 127.2(1)); in those circumstances, the physician must report the matter to healthcare professional's regulatory college.

There is an exception to the reporting expectation in that reporting is not required if information regarding sexual abuse or sexual misconduct of a patient (or former patients) if the information is received in the course of providing professional services to the other regulated health professional (section 127.2(2) of the HPA).

Under Bill 21, the HPA (section 127.1) now requires regulated health professionals to report decisions of unprofessional conduct (in any jurisdiction), negligence and charges/convictions under the Criminal Code to all regulatory colleges of which they are a member.

RELATED STANDARDS OF PRACTICE

- Boundary Violations: Personal
- Boundary Violations: Sexual
- Code of Ethics & Professionalism
- Duty to Report a Colleague
- Duty to Report Self
- Informed Consent
- Terminating the Physician-Patient Relationship

COMPANION RESOURCES

- Advice to the Profession:
 - Boundary Violations: Personal
 - Duty to Report a Colleague/Self
 - Informed Consent for Adults
- Patient FAQs: Personal & Sexual Boundary Violations
- CMPA's Good Practices Guide: Maintaining appropriate boundaries
- CMPA's Good Practices Guide: Why and when do we need consent?